TRUMP'S LAWYER SAYS HE WAS ASKED TO TESTIFY

President Donald Trump's personal lawyer Michael Cohen said on Tuesday he had been asked to testify on Sept. 5 before the House Intelligence Committee. "I am committed to complying with the subpoena by the House Permanent Select Intelligence Committee, including the request to testify on Sept. 5," Cohen told Reuters, confirming an account first reported by Bloomberg News.

The House committee is among those investigating alleged Russian meddling in the U.S. election and any possible collusion with the president's campaign or associates. It approved a subpoena for Cohen on May 31, but the committee had not announced any date for his testimony. REUTERS

CANADA'S DETENTION OF MEXICANS SURGES

Detention of Mexican citizens in Canada has spiked since December, when the government lifted its visa requirement for visitors from Mexico, figures obtained by Reuters show, even as Canada burnishes its image as more welcoming than the United States. Detentions in the first five months of 2017 were more than twice the previous two years combined, according to Canada Border Services Agency statistics provided last week in response to a Reuters request. Canada's detention of Mexicans surged more than tenfold from 24 in November to 331 in April, the data show. The number of Mexicans filing refugee claims more than quadrupled from November to March. Prime Minister Justin Trudeau promised to lift the visa requirement, imposed by the previous government, during the 2015 election campaign. REUTERS

DEPUTY AG: NO CAUSE TO FIRE MUELLER

The No. 2 official at the U.S. Justice Department told Congress the special counsel investigating Russia's alleged interference in the 2016 U.S. presidential election and possible collusion with the Trump campaign is going to have "the full degree of independence" he needs. "Director Mueller is going to have the full degree of independence that he needs to conduct that investigation appropriately," Deputy Attorney General Rod Rosenstein told a Senate appropriations subcommittee, referring to special counsel Robert Mueller. Rosenstein, who has the sole ability to fire Mueller given that Attorney General Jeff Sessions has recused himself from matters relating to the investigation, told the panel he had seen no evidence of good cause for letting Mueller go and that he would not follow any theoretical order to fire him absent such evidence. REUTERS

VERIZON CLOSES YAHOO DEAL, MAYER STEPS DOWN

Verizon Communications Inc. said on Tuesday it closed its $4.48 billion acquisition of Yahoo Inc.'s core business and that Marissa Mayer, chief executive of the internet company, had resigned. The completion of the acquisition marks the end of the line for Yahoo as a standalone internet company, a storied tech pioneer once valued at more than $100 billion. Verizon, the No. 1 U.S. wireless operator, is combining

Yahoo with AOL, which it bought two years ago, to form a new venture called Oath, led by AOL CEO Tim Armstrong. Oath's more than 50 brands include HuffPost, TechCrunch and Tumblr. "Given the inherent changes to my role, I'll be leaving the company," Mayer wrote in an email to employees on Tuesday that she also posted on Tumblr. "However, I want all of you to know that I'm brimming with nostalgia, gratitude, and optimism." REUTERS

Attorney General Jeff Sessions prepares to offer testimony on Capitol Hill on Tuesday. GETTY IMAGES

Jeff Sessions angers Democrats with refusal to testify on Trump conversations

The testimony by Sessions marked the latest chapter in a saga that has dogged the Trump presidency.

U.S. Attorney General Jeff Sessions on Tuesday denounced as a "detestable lie" the idea that he colluded with Russian meddling in the 2016 presidential campaign, and he clashed with Democratic lawmakers over his refusal to detail his conversations with President Donald Trump.

Sessions, a senior member of the Republican president's Cabinet and an adviser to his presidential campaign, had a series of tense exchanges with Democrats on the Senate Intelligence Committee during about 2½ hours of high-stakes testimony as they pressed him to recount conversations with the president.

"You raised your right hand here today and said you would solemnly swear to tell the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth," Democratic Sen. Martin Heinrich said. "Now you're not answering questions. You're impeding this investigation."

Sessions refused to say whether he had discussed FBI Director James Comey's handling of the FBI's Russia probe with Trump before the president fired Comey on May 9. Similarly, he did not answer whether Trump had expressed concern to Sessions about the attorney general's March decision to recuse himself from the Russia investigation. Sessions previously offered to resign because of tensions with Trump over his recusal decision.

Sessions also refused to answer whether any Justice Department officials had discussed possible presidential pardons of individuals being looked at in the Russian investigations.

Russia has denied repeatedly that it interfered in the U.S. election, and Trump has denied any collusion by his campaign with Moscow.

Democratic Sen. Ron Wyden told Sessions, "I believe the American people have had it with stonewalling. Americans don't want to hear that answers to relevant questions are privileged."

"I am not stonewalling," Sessions replied. Sessions said he was following Justice Department policy and would not discuss communications with the president.

Sen. Angus King, an independent, questioned Sessions' legal basis for refusing to answer. Sessions said Trump had not invoked executive privilege.

Executive privilege is a power that can be claimed by a president or senior executive branch officials to withhold information from Congress or the courts to protect the executive branch decision-making process.

"It is my judgment that it would be inappropriate for me to answer and reveal private conversations with the president when he has not had a full opportunity to review the questions and to make a decision on whether or not to approve such an answer," Sessions said.

The committee's Republican chairman, Sen. Richard Burr, asked Sessions to ask the White House if there were areas officials there would be comfortable with him answering and provide written answers if so.

Philly DJs continue to inspire and unite partiers citywide

As summer heats up, Philly DJs spin records to match and shape the moods of their city.

MICHAEL BUTLER
@MetroPhilly
letters@metro.us

Philadelphia DJs are entertainers that find ways to unite people through their scratches of the latest hip-hop jams and their blends of soulful classics. From legendary DJ Jazzy Jeff to soulful mixmaster Rich Medina, Philadelphia DJs have left an indelible mark on popular music and earned a reputation from music lovers worldwide as some of the best to ever rock a party.

But whether people are dancing to their favorite songs at summer block parties or showing off their newest dance moves at a club or bar, good music and the DJs that play it are an integral part of Philly's culture.

Philly has a tough reputation as the city that created Rocky Balboa and even booed Santa Claus at an Eagles game. Fortunately for DJ Lean Wit It, that Philly toughness makes his connection to the people that love his mixes much stronger.

"I feel like the DJ has a responsibility," Lean Wit It said. "When Trump got inaugurated, I DJed the night before and the night of his inauguration. You could feel the [low] energy in the city, especially among people of color. Having an audience of disenfranchised people of color, I felt like it was my duty to play music that was uplifting [and made] people leave with some sort of hope."

Astro 8000 is another local DJ who has used his talents to bring people of all different backgrounds together to celebrate being different, through eclectic events like the Pink Party. Born in Lebanon, Pennsylvania, Astro 8000 fell in love with the Philadelphia music scene through a close friend and never looked back.

"[One of my best friends] grew up with DJ Buzzworthy and DJ Diamond Kuts uptown, so I got plugged in with Buzzworthy," Astro recalled. "Buzz eventually told me that him and Diamond Kuts liked how I DJed and invited me to be part of [Diamond Kuts'] Born Leaders DJ squad."

Learning alongside popular DJ Diamond Kuts also opened Astro's eyes up to having inclusive events, a signature of Philly's club scene.

"I don't really like specifically any one kind of culture or scene at my parties or events. I throw the Pink Party because pink is a universal thing as a color and not just the so-called cool kids come out, but all kinds of people with open minds who just want to party," he said.

Historic Philly DJ moments

DJ Jazzy Jeff:

As one half of the iconic Philly hip-hop duo DJ Jazzy Jeff & The Fresh Prince, Jeffrey "Jazzy Jeff" Townes found even more fame on the small screen as Jazz, Will Smith's beloved best friend on the megapopular '90s sitcom "The Fresh Prince of Bel-Air."

DJ Diamond Kuts:

DJ Diamond Kuts showed how important a DJ's voice can be, as part of former President Barack Obama's "Deejays For Obama" campaign. The Born Leader DJ would not only perform for and develop a rapport with Obama but also helped to endear him to her young audience of trendsetters.

Bounce on a trampoline with Allongée's SOAR! class

Participants in an Allongée class, a "ballet boot camp" exercise created by a Philly trainer. COURTESY OF ALLONGÉE OLD CITY

New "Allongée" exercise class designed by Philly trainer throws Metro writer for a loop.

CASSIE HEPLER
@MetroPhilly
letters@metro.us

I'm not the most physically coordinated person.

So it made perfect sense to start my first Allongée experience with the newest, hardest class the boutique exercise space offers, SOAR!, which takes the regular ballet/barre class and elevates it onto a personal-sized trampoline.

Allongée combines strength training for the small muscle groups (like in ballet or barre class) with a large range of movement in the high-energy, low-impact CardioBarre technique. Fortunately, I am a yoga lover, so some of the same movements seemed to transition well.

Tiny and taut founder and Allongée creator Jillian Dreusikemet met us outside in the alley for the 11:30 a.m. weekday class on Bodine Street (across from the Old City Beer Garden) and let us in to the studio space on the second floor, complete with a shower and slipless socks for sale.

With water for sale ($1 each), we hydrated, filled our reusable bottles, put on our grippy socks and got into our trampoline space with a mirror in front to watch as we made fools of ourselves. I chose the spot right next to Jill for maximum what-am-I-doing purposes, and soon we were bouncing.

Thank goodness for that barre in front of my trampoline, and that the "mirror" is actually made out of mylar, a form of shiny plastic.

At first, I was amazed at how well I could keep up while turning a bright my graceful coordination. So I would hold on to the barre and do baby bounces while targeting the ol' glutes and legs in a more "normal" manner.

My favorite part was certainly just bouncing up and down as high as you could go during our "resting" phases. It was fun, childlike and exhilarating to almost fall at points. I bounced my way through class and took it easy when I needed to.

Jill encouraged water breaks and warned us we would be sore the next day. I was surprisingly not sore at all afterward, but my appetite was ravbeet red, as usual. We would do football drills with our feet while bouncing. We were doing cheerleading toe touches in the air (some better than others) while not trying to smash our faces in the mirror. I quickly learned not to keep up with the tempo of the pumping music and go at my own pace to save myself from certain cartoon-style bodily harm.

I also learned that doing front, side and back kicks while bouncing is impossible for me with enous. I also dropped a couple pounds as my body responds best to strength training mixed with cardio. Allongée is supposed to "build strength and stamina while also creating length and flawless muscle structure," and was started as a program to assist dancers with their cardiovascular health.

This summer, Allongée will expand nationally with an online video library, and pop-up classes will also be held in New York City and Washington, D.C.

Philly counterprotester charged with allegedly striking police horse

Lisa Joy Simon, 23, was arrested during an anti-Sharia protest in Harrisburg after allegedly hitting Sampson, a police horse.

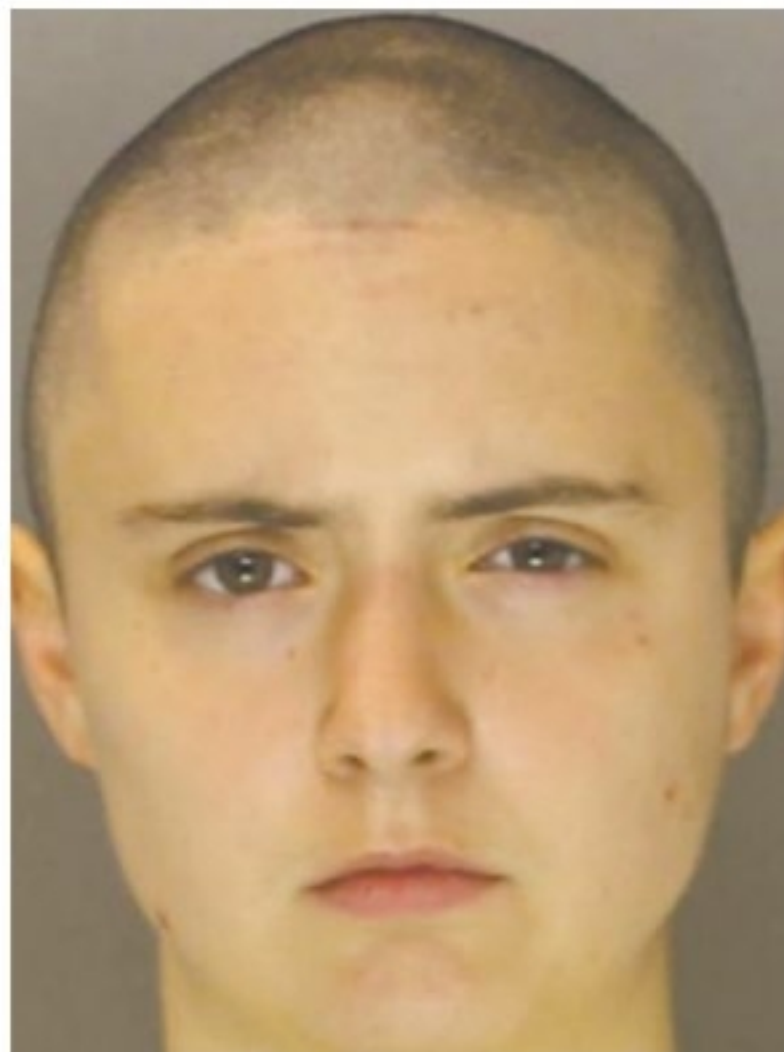

A Philadelphia woman attending an ACT for America rally in Harrisburg was arrested last weekend when she allegedly struck a Pennsylvania State Police horse in the side of the neck with a flag pole.

According to police, Lisa Joy Simon, 23, was arrested on Saturday after she "used a flag pole with a silver nail at the top of the pole" to strike a police horse named Sampson in the neck at about 11:32 a.m.

Simon was in attendance, police said, at one of several marches held in protest of alleged Sharia law across the country last weekend organized by the conservative group ACT for America.

An ACT spokeswoman said Simon was not one of their members and was in attendance as part of a counterprotest.

"Our people are normally very respectful of the police. I don't think they would purposefully stab a police horse in the neck," spokeswoman Carrie French said. "It really sounds out of character for our people. ... Other reports have said she was with Antifa."

Lisa Joy Simon PROVIDED

Law enforcement officials said the rally marchers headed north on North Third Street into Harrisburg's midtown area, and multiple Pennsylvania State Police mounted units were working to keep the marchers from blocking the 1200 block of North Sixth Street.

At that time, police said, Simon struck the police horse, Sampson, in the neck and obstructed other officers from being able to move the crowd onto the sidewalk along that block. After the incident, police said that the officer and Sampson were able to continue to work after suffering only a minimal injury.

Simon was arrested and charged with assault on police, taunting police animals, prohibited offensive weapons, obstruction to law enforcement function, resisting arrest and disorderly conduct.

COSBY TRIAL

Jurors deliberate in Cosby sex assault case

A Pennsylvania jury spent most of Tuesday deliberating in the trial of Bill Cosby, who is accused of sexually assaulting a female friend who had come to the entertainer for career advice in 2004.

Cosby was accused of sexually assaulting Andrea Constand in his home in the Philadelphia suburbs. He was charged days before the statute of limitations was to expire.

On Tuesday afternoon, jurors asked to hear testimony from the police officer who originally took Constand's statement. Cosby, who based his long career on a family-friendly comedy style, did not testify. He has denied wrongdoing and described his encounter with Constand as consensual.

Also on Tuesday, Cosby's spokesman, Andrew Wyatt, released a statement from a woman, Marguerite Jackson, who was barred from testifying as a defense witness.

Jackson said she worked with Constand at Temple University and shared a hotel room with her during occasional trips. On an unspecified date, she said, the women saw a news story about a famous man accused of drugging and sexually assaulting women.

Constand told Jackson a high-profile man had done something similar to her, according to the statement. After Jackson pressed her, Constand allegedly admitted it had not happened but said she could easily use the story to make money off the man, Jackson said.

Constand testified at trial that she did not know who Marguerite Jackson was.

The jurors began deliberations late Monday and resumed weighing the charges against Cosby, 79, the following morning. Jurors have asked to hear some of Cosby's prior statements, including his description of the pills he gave Constand before the alleged attack.

Man charged with threats to Jewish groups pleads guilty

A former journalist charged with calling in bomb threats to Jewish centers as part of a plot to get revenge on his ex-girlfriend pleaded guilty Tuesday to cyberstalking and making hoax threats.

Juan Thompson, 32, entered his plea before U.S. District Judge Kevin Castel in Manhattan federal court.

Showing little emotion, Thompson admitted that starting in 2016, he sent emails and faxes to his former romantic partner's employer containing false and salacious claims, and sent bomb threats to community centers, for which he tried to frame her.

"I committed all of these acts with the intent to disrupt my ex-romantic partner's life and cause her great distress," he said. "For this, I deeply apologize."

One of Thompson's lawyers, Mark Gombiner, said in court that he had agreed not to appeal any sentence of 46 months or less.

Thompson was arrested in St. Louis, Missouri, on March 3, and has been in custody since then, charged with one count of cyberstalking. A second count of making hoax bomb threats was added in a superseding criminal information revealed on Tuesday.

Federal prosecutors said Thompson engaged in a vicious, monthslong harassment campaign against his ex-girlfriend, using various email accounts to accuse her of possessing child pornography, driving drunk and, finally, making bomb threats targeting Jewish groups.

Thompson made some threats in his own name and then accused his ex-girlfriend of framing him, and made other threats posing as her, prosecutors said.

Authorities have been investigating a surge of threats against Jewish organizations, including more than 100 bomb threats against community centers in dozens of states in separate waves since January.

The organizations Thompson threatened included a Jewish muse-

High-level US visit leads North Korea to free student in coma

Otto Warmbier, an American university student held prisoner in North Korea for 17 months and said by his family to be in a coma, has been medically evacuated from the reclusive country after a rare visit there from a high-level U.S. official.

Warmbier, 22, a University of Virginia student from suburban Cincinnati, was on his way back to the United States on Tuesday, U.S. Secretary of State Rex Tillerson said.

The release came after Joseph Yun, the State Department's special envoy on North Korea, traveled to Pyongyang and demanded his freedom on "humanitarian grounds," capping a flurry of secret diplomatic contacts, a U.S. official said.

Warmbier's parents,

Sadly, he is in a coma and we have been told he has been in that condition since March of 2016."

The parents

Fred and Cindy, confirmed their son was on a medevac flight, which was due to arrive on Tuesday evening.

"Sadly, he is in a coma and we have been told he has been in that condition since March of 2016," the parents said in a statement. "We learned of this only one week ago. We want the world to know how we and our son have been brutalized and terrorized by the pariah regime in North Korea."

Warmbier was detained in January 2016 and sentenced to 15 years of hard labor in March last year for trying to steal an item with a propaganda slogan, according to North Korean media.

A spokeswoman at the University of Cincinnati Medical Center said Warmbier would be treated there.

The family said it was told by North Korean officials, through contacts with American envoys, that Warmbier fell ill from botulism sometime after his March 2016 trial and lapsed into a coma after taking a sleeping pill, the Washington Post reported. REUTERS

Upscale Neiman Marcus shelves plans for a sale

Upscale retailer Neiman Marcus Group said it had terminated any talks regarding a partial or full sale of the company, nearly three months after embarking on a plan seeking strategic alternatives.

The news comes days after the Wall Street Journal reported that talks between Saks Fifth Avenue owner Hudson's Bay Co. and Neiman Marcus regarding a potential combination had stalled.

"While looking ahead, we know challenges remain, but we are encouraged by the strategies we have in place to improve our operational efficiencies and performance," Chief Executive Karen Katz said on a postearnings call.

Neiman, struggling to seek relief from a swelling debt load, hired investment bank Lazard Ltd. to bolster its balance sheet, Reuters reported in March, as the company continued to struggle with lackluster demand in the face of stiff competition from Amazon.com Inc. and fast-fashion retailers such as H&M and Zara.

Much of Neiman Marcus' debt load stems from its $6 billion leveraged buyout in 2013, when its current owners, Ares Management LP and Canadian public pension fund CPPIB, acquired it from other private equity firms.

Neiman Marcus had total liabilities of $6.4 billion, including $1.2 billion of deferred income taxes according to its latest annual filing.

The company on Tuesday reported its fourth straight quarterly loss, and posted a nearly 5 percent dip in same-store sales for the third quarter ending April 29.

Retailers have struggled to cope with changes in consumer tastes as shoppers increasingly shop online or spend on travel and big-ticket home improvement items and less on apparel and accessories. REUTERS

Georgia police hunt escaped inmates after two guards are killed

Police in Georgia were searching Tuesday for two armed inmates who escaped from a prison transport after overpowering and disarming their guards, both of whom were shot dead, authorities said.

The guards were transporting prisoners at 5:45 a.m. in Putnam County, about 70 miles southeast of Atlanta, when inmates Donnie Rowe, 43, and Ricky Dubose, 24, disarmed them, the sheriff's office said in a statement.

One of the inmates shot and killed both officers, police said, adding that Rowe and Dubose are believed to be armed with the officers' .40-caliber Glock pistols.

After killing the guards, the inmates approached a dark green Honda Civic that was stopped nearby and demanded the driver give them the car, Putnam County Sheriff spokeswoman Teresa Slade said.

"This guy happened to be driving up at the wrong time," Slade said of the motorist, adding that he was not injured during the carjacking.

The Georgia Department of Corrections said both slain officers worked at Baldwin State Prison in Hardwick, Georgia. It named them as Curtis Billue, who joined the department in 2007, and Christopher Monica, who was hired in 2009.

Rowe had been in Baldwin State Prison since June 2002 serving a life sentence without parole for armed robbery and other offenses.

Dubose had been in prison since July 2015 for crimes including armed robbery and was not due for release until 2034, according to the corrections department.

Baltimore to flood streets with police after rash of killings

Baltimore police will put more officers on the street to battle a surge in killings that included six homicides in seven hours this week, part of a wave of deadly violence not seen in the port city in years, authorities said on Tuesday.

Patrol officers and detectives will go on 12-hour shifts through the weekend, instead of the normal 10-hour stints, and all other officers will be placed in squad cars or on foot patrols, Police Commissioner Kevin Davis said.

The six homicides raised the number of killings in the city of 620,000 people to 158 for the year. The pace is 27 percent ahead of that in 2015, when Baltimore notched its second-highest number of homicides this century, according to police figures.

"We're just as angry and frustrated and ticked off about it as anyone else watching, and I expect people to be upset," Davis said at a news conference.

The police commissioner said Baltimore was facing a lethal combination of drugs, guns and gangs as crime groups battled for turf. Officers this month seized 66 pounds of the opioid fentanyl and 15 kg (33 pounds) of heroin bound for West Baltimore, one of the deadliest gang battlegrounds, he said.

The overnight violence on Tuesday included a woman gunned down by a masked shooter and two people fatally shot in an apparent drug dispute, Davis said.

The East Coast city has increased coverage by officers during prior spikes in violence. Davis, who did not specify how many more officers would be on the streets, said officials would evaluate the effort's results next week.

The violence comes as the Baltimore police department, the nation's eighth biggest, is under a federal court order to remedy widespread civil rights abuses uncovered by a U.S. Justice Department review. The review was triggered by the 2015 death of a suspect from injuries in police custody that sparked arson and rioting. REUTERS

The 'Bachelor in Paradise' story gets worse

On Monday, news broke that production on "Bachelor in Paradise" had been halted after accusations of sexual misconduct came out. Now, more disturbing details are arising — with one contestant saying she did not consent to the filmed sexual encounter.

Contestant Corinne Olympios says she was blacked out when things got sexual with "The Bachelorette" alum DeMario Jackson. And according to TMZ, she blames the producers for not pulling the plug and protecting her.

Apparently, after the alleged swimming-pool incident — which saw what TMZ delicately calls "intense rubbing" and a series of sex acts, but not actual intercourse between Corinne and DeMario — fellow cast members began telling Corinne about what happened with DeMario, and that they had voiced concern to producers. Corinne says she remembers nothing.

This is messed up on so many levels. Here's hoping Corinne isn't simply seen as a girl who was asking for it — because no matter what, women are never "just asking for it."

Corinne Olympios is at the center of this horrible, horrible thing.

ScarJo is still making out with that 'SNL' dude

Scarlett Johansson sure has interesting taste in men, y'all. Apparently, she and Colin Jost, host of "Weekend Update," are still a thing.

Page Six reports that the two kept it "chill"

on a "hot" date night over the weekend. Ugh.

The "Rough Night" star and Jost enjoyed drinks in Manhattan — Johansson downed a couple of Manhattans, atta girl! And Jost ordered a single speciality cocktail. I totally see Colin Jost as a dude who orders a singular house cocktail. Typical.

They were also "nice" and "holding hands" according to a spy. Sounds special.

I mean, if Johansson and Jost are holding hands while dining, things are probably pretty serious. I personally wouldn't let someone's sweaty palm get in the way of a good meal — but hey! That's just me.

But good luck to these two, I guess? I mean, I'm not convinced this isn't some sort of elaborate ruse, but still.

If it makes you happy, ScarJo.

Julia Stiles is having a baby!

You may remember Julia Stiles from such influential, groundbreaking films as "10 Things I Hate About You" or "Save the Last Dance." She was also in some of those "Bourne" movies, but I like to remember her when she was at her prime — as a modern day so-called shrew making out with Heath Ledger; or as a ballet dancer who chooses hip-hop and interracial love over weekly therapy and hanging out with Kerry Washington.

Anyway, Stiles is 36 years old now. My, how time flies! Oh, and she's got a gut full of baby. That's right: She's pregnant! People broke the news first, reporting that Stiles and her fiancé, Preston J. Cook, will welcome their first child later this year.

The couple met on the set of the 2015 film "Go With Me," where Cook worked as a camera assistant. Also? They've been engaged since Christmas Eve 2015 and they're like, in no rush to get married or whatever.

Once again, bravo to those citizens brave enough to have a baby under Trump's rule. So brave. Couldn't be me!

The star of your favorite early aughts movies is going to be a mom.

"Haters are gonna hate."

of her former self. "Kim leads the pack, and she's the queen of thick skin. She counsels everybody else."

And yes, she worries that being rich and famous will get her grandchildren bullied. "It's my grandchildren who I worry about because ... they don't have a choice. And I worry, I do, because it is such a bullying environment."

On (and coming up with) the art of shilling one's family for fame and money and recognition. "It's so heightened and, you know, haters are gonna hate. You expect it now."

Yep, Kris Jenner's philosophy can be boiled down to "haters going to hate," which honestly? Is true.

Kristen Mary Jenner just spends her nights a-worrying about her family. The Kardashian-Jenner matriarch, you see, is specifically concerned that her grandchildren will be bullied because of their great burden of riches and fame.

Kris sat down with

The Hollywood Reporter for its reality-TV roundtable, and discussed various facets of her show, and all those dang fears.

Davidana Janae gives us style advice for Philly Sips

Davidana Janae is also known as Vida Fashionista on Instagram.
ALL PHOTOS PROVIDED

Go from work drab to happy-hour fab effortlessly.

JENNIFER LOGUE
@jenniferlogue
jennifer.logue@metro.us

If you're a sports fan, you probably recognize Davidana Janae from the Sixers Dance Team. Her last game was only a few weeks ago; the 28-year-old recently retired from the team to focus on her career as a stylist and fashion blogger with her website, Vida Fashionista.

With the launch of Center City District Sips last week, we thought it would be a good idea for Janae to give us some style advice on how to slay at the weekly happy hour without stressing too much. (Let's face it, the daily grind is stressful enough.)

Here are five tips on how to go from the office to Sips without sacrificing great style.

Wear heels

If you live in the city, chances are you're wearing comfortable shoes to walk to work, but ditch the sneakers and flats for a pair of heels before hitting Sips. "It will give you a little elevation and will make your legs look nice," Janae says. "I'm only 5'3," so I get all the height I can get!"

Carry a cute tote

Not sure where to put your bulky walking shoes? Invest in a cute tote that will add life to your outfit, but also hold your necessary goods. Throw in an umbrella as well to safeguard against an unexpected rainstorm.

Leave the cut-off tops at home

Remember that Sips

is an after-work event so it's important to be dressed to impress other professionals. "We're not going club-hopping in Atlantic City," Janae says. "You could see your boss. Try to look conservative in a casual way."

Sweatproof your makeup.

Use a setting spray

Getting all dolled up in the summer can be pretty torturous, especially when it gets extra hot. Janae recommends using a setting spray to keep your makeup looking fresh all day long. "I used it all the time for dancing," she notes. "Dancing on the court, you're going to sweat, and this keeps it looking just as good as when the game started."

Statement earrings are your new best friend

If you prefer fashion that is simple and straightforward, a pair of statement earrings can elevate your look for happy hour. "Throw on a statement earring and you'll get compliments on it all night long," assures Janae.

At the end of the day, Janae says that the most important thing to bring to Sips is your confidence and a smile.

If you're hungry for more Sips style ideas, be sure to follow the #CCD-SipsStyle hashtag on Instagram as well as Janae's page @vidafashionista.

Statement earrings make an outfit pop.

A street fair where everything costs $1? Yes, please.

Sample some of the best sips and bites along Baltimore Avenue in West Philly, and score some other awesome deals as well. Whether you're looking to snack your way through the fair or get something to treat yourself later, here are six things you can't miss at the Dollar Stroll on Thursday evening. Rain or shine, businesses will be ready to help kick off summer in West Philly.

Good things always start with beer

Sample $1 beers from Dock Street Brewing Co. at 701 S. 50th St. One buck gets you 7 ounces of beer or a pint glass from the brewery.

Get theater tickets ... yes, dollar theater tickets

Curio Theatre Company will have dollar tickets for any preview performance of one of their upcoming shows. How can they get away with selling tickets for so cheap? "It's really driven people to come explore the theater and come back for more shows," says Chris Richman of the University City District. Check out the gorgeous venue at 4740 Baltimore Ave.

Samosas galore

According to Richman, the samosas from Desi Village are crowd-pleasers every dollar stroll. Head to the restaurant at 4527 Baltimore Ave. for the best crispy snack.

Jump-start your summer garden

Have you been putting off starting the garden of your dreams? Greensgrow West has your back. They will have $1 plant starters available to get you caught up in time for the summer growing season. Talk to them to get tips and tricks for your garden at their small urban farm at 5123 Baltimore Ave.

Whip it good

The Dollar Stroll certainly won't lack desserts, but make sure you try the frozen banana whips from Mariposa Food Co-Op. The co-op, known for their fresh local produce and other groceries, will be selling the dessert that makes you think of summertime at a state fair. Head to 4824 Baltimore Ave. for dessert and more.

West Philly pride

Boutique VIX Emporium always has some of the best art and gifts, most made by local artists and makers. Check out their selection of West Philly notecards, stickers and more during the Dollar Stroll. Stop by to pick up some adorable swag at 5009 Baltimore Ave.

Mary Steenburgen laughs through pain

The Oscar winner talks about Demetri Martin's "Dean" and remembers the late Jonathan Demme.

MATT PRIGGE
@mattprigge
matt.prigge@metro.us

Mary Steenburgen has worked with some of the world's most serious filmmakers. But she also has a thing for jokesters, like Will Ferrell ("Elf," "Step Brothers") and Will Forte (on TV's "The Last Man on Earth," recently renewed for a fourth season). Now she's been directed by Demetri Martin, for the comic-actor's new indie comedy "Dean."

"I'm very drawn to funny people. I married a funny person," Steen-

GETTY IMAGES

Mary Steenburgen plays a woman who winds up going on dates with a recently widowed man (Kevin Kline) in Demetri Martin's "Dean," in theaters Friday. CBS FILMS burgen says, referring to her spouse of 22 years, Ted Danson.

But what the Oscar-winning actress, 64, likes even more than funny people is when comedy is used seriously. That's what happens in "Dean." It revolves around Martin's title character — an artist whose mom has just died, leaving him and his father (Kevin Kline) devastated. Unsure how to deal, Dean whimsically decides to fly to L.A., where he gets involved with a woman (Gillian Jacobs). Meanwhile, his dad finds himself drawn to someone else, too: a real estate agent played by Steenburgen.

For Steenburgen, the material hit close to home. It made her think of when her own dad died, when she was 35.

"That seems like you'd be old enough to deal with it," she explains. "But I was going through a divorce and I had two little kids. [My father] was one of the rocks in my life. It felt like the men in my life were all vanishing. So I remember every single thing

Stop making sense

Talking to Steenburgen about some of the great, funny men in her life inevitably leads us to talk about Jonathan Demme, the filmmaker who directed her Oscar-winning performance in 1980's "Melvin and Howard," and who cast her again in 1993's "Philadelphia." Demme passed away in late April, robbing us of one of the great, goofy humanists of the movies. (He also made "Stop Making Sense," "Something Wild" and "The Silence of the Lambs.")

Like most people who knew him, Steenburgen gushes about Demme's warmth, his love of people, his silly sense of humor. "He was soulful. No surprise he made films about music, because he had a very musical soul," she says. "He loved women. He made us feel beautiful and sexy and utterly respected, all at the same time."

Dean was going through — feeling like, 'Could I just get on a plane and get away from all this?'

Steenburgen says she loves movies and TV that deal with pain in humorous ways. She feels "Dean" is similar to "The Last Man on Earth," in which she plays Gail, a former restaurateur trying to eke by after the apocalypse. It allows her to work with another funny person, star Will Forte, who's not that different from Martin.

"Both of those men have minds that don't follow the group trajectory. They're off on their own unique ways of thinking," she says. "For me, that creative edge is my favorite place to be — that edge where you don't know if somebody's going to say, 'We need you to play Devo's 'Whip It' on the accordion!'" (Steenburgen really does play the accordion.)

The powerful Latinas of 'Orange Is the New Black'

This season of "Orange Is the New Black" is the most intense yet. The entire plot takes place over the course of three chaotic days in Litchfield Prison, and the series is going bigger than ever.

We sat down with Dascha Polanco (Daya), as well as Selenis Leyva (Gloria) and Jackie Cruz ("La Flaca") to talk about what they've learned from the series, politics in prison and the powerful side of Latinas on television.

So many stars of this show are powerful Latinas. How do you think that has changed television?

Jackie Cruz: I think it started with our show, because we were the first ones. People saw how powerful Latinas could be in a role. Selenis Leyva: Netflix is breaking down barriers.

Women in leading roles is something that goes way beyond what Hollywood is used to doing.

Do you feel a responsibility in telling these stories that have to do with politics and society?

Dascha Polanco: The writers have been able to touch on these issues in an indirect way. Being able to be a Latina right now, outside of statistics and stereotypes, is very important — not falling into the negative.

We're part of the United States' DNA.

What have you learned from the prison universe?

JC: I feel like each season educates us a little more about the life these women live, and how corrupt and manipulative that world can become.

SL: Life can become really political in prison. After the initial success of "Orange Is the New Black," we started working with several associations that support women who now have a second chance. And their stories have surprised me.

This season is more intense than ever. How do you do not let it affect you off-set?

SL: You never know when something is going to affect you and how. There were some scenes that were difficult for me and affected me a lot — so much so that even when I got home I had to avoid certain subjects.

Did you ever imagine that you would have so much success?

SL: We never imagined it. Now, we're recognizable, so we've been able to take advantage to help different causes.

DP: There's also all the benefits we've gained, like getting into restaurants faster or getting an extra glass of wine on flights. [They laugh.] It's really a good thing, indeed. TANIA

Blount 'can't compare' Wentz to Brady

Two-time Super Bowl champion LeGarrette Blount has the most Super Bowl rings of any Eagles player.

EVAN MACY
@evan_macy
evan.macy@metro.us

LeGarrette Blount got his Super Bowl ring Friday, his second as a Patriot. Blount has the most Super Bowl rings of any Eagles player, with Chris Long (also with Patriots), Chris Maragos (Seahawks in 2014), Torrey Smith (Ravens in 2013) and Malcolm Jenkins and Patrick Robinson (Saints in 2010) being the players with one.

How will that play in the Eagles locker room?

"You want to experience winning on any team," Blount said after mandatory minicamp practice Tuesday when asked if he was as motivated to win a third.

LeGarrette Blount could get worked as the Eagles' featured running back next season. GETTY IMAGES

"You want to experience winning in pickup basketball. As a competitor you never want to lose whether it's playing video games or in the NFL."

Blount says he hasn't worn the ring since officially getting the hardware this past weekend, and says he doesn't intend to use it to motivate his teammates this season in Philly.

"I feel like they are pretty motivated themselves," Blount said with a chuckle. "I don't think they need to see my ring to get motivated to win one."

One of the main reasons Blount and the Patriots were successful — obviously — was Tom Brady, who now has five rings himself. Blount will be playing with a young and unproven quarterback in 2017, in stark contrast to the near 40-year-old wily veteran he lined up behind in New England. How do the two measure up?

"This is Carson's second year, this is Tom's whatever year it is," Blount said. "You can't really compare the two. He's a rising star in this league, he's going to continue to rise, he's going to be really good at some point.

"I feel like he's a leader. Any quarterback you get on your team you want him to lead the team and be a franchise guy. He has to have the mindset he has to have the skill set to lead."

As opposed to the Patriots' perennial contention in the AFC East, the Eagles haven't made the playoffs since 2013, and haven't won a playoff game since 2008. It will be a completely different experience as Blount and the Birds grind and battle in an evenly-matched division for a playoff spot.

"Obviously you can't predict the future," he said. "You can't see things that far ahead of time. We are going to keep grinding and keep working we definitely want to improve our record from last year."

Haseley's college coach thinks Phillies' first-rounder will make majors quickly

The Phillies' eighth overall pick, Adam Haseley, already has big-league potential, according to Brian O'Connor.

KYLE PHILLIPPI
@Kyle_Phillippi
sports@metro.us

Brian O'Connor has seen plenty of talent come through the ranks at the University of Virginia since taking over in 2004.

He saw Ryan Zimmerman and Mark Reynolds before they became stars at the next level, and he'll be the first to tell you that the Phillies first-round pick on Monday, Adam Haseley, is right there with those guys.

"As far as performance in the ACC and for the University of Virginia, Adam is right up there as far as how he performed for us and his development as a player," O'Connor said over the phone. "I think he's a guy that hopefully it doesn't take too long to get to the major leagues. He's a guy that can play there for a long time."

"I think the sky is the limit for him."

O'Connor made an interesting point when discussing how Haseley will fare when making the jump to his likely destination in Lakewood (A). Since Haseley was a two-way player for Virginia, having played both center field and pitcher, he never worked out with the position players, instead using the workout regimen of the pitchers.

Basically, he wasn't doing the heavy lifting that his fellow outfielders were doing. That, though, will change as he finally transitions to a full-time position player who can now amp up his workouts.

"He's going to get a lot stronger because he's been a two-way player for us," O'Connor said, noting how he only lifted with the pitchers. "Now that he's able to transition and just be a position player, I think he can physically get a lot stronger, which can really enhance his game."

The Phillies are hoping a safe, established college bat can make a near-immediate impact on their franchise. GETTY IMAGES

That really ups the ante for Haseley, who already made tremendous strides in his power numbers as a junior, belting 14 homers with 56 RBIs in 58 games.

Imagine him concentrating more on strength-building as opposed to the endurance and flexibility that pitchers focus more on?

O'Connor recalls about a quarter of the way into this past season, seeing how Haseley had hit seven home runs with six of those going the opposite way. It was then that he realized just how far along he had come.

"When he started to do it on a consistent basis, I was like 'All right, he now has taken a step to where he can do this at a very high level,'" O'Connor said.

So how fast will Haseley rise through the ranks?

That'll fall on his shoulders now, but if O'Connor has learned anything about the once highly touted high school prospect, it's that he's as focused as any player as he's ever seen, even including the likes of Zimmerman and Reynolds.

"This guy's poise, his ability to handle big situations, to handle one at-bat to the next, is really advanced," O'Connor said. "For somebody to move through the minor leagues and ultimately have success at the highest level, I think those are skills you have to have ... there's no doubt to what he has to do, he has a lot of conviction in what he has to do to be successful."
